Nivel 6 -non fiction stories

A habitat is a home for an animal

Every animal lives in a habitat that is its natural home.

Animals of the ocean are aquatic animals.

There you can see fish, seals, dolphins, and animals in shells.

Animals of the desert are coyotes, turtles, iguanas, and birds also. Their habitat is very dry and hot.

Farm animals are domestic animals. The farmer keeps their habitat safe. There you can see cows, horses, donkeys, chickens, dogs, cats, and ducks on the farm.

Forest animals are wild animals. There you can see bears, foxes, eagles, deer, and squirrels. They look for their own food.

Zoo animals are wild animals too. The zookeepers try to fix a natural habitat for the animals from many different places.

Which is your favorite animal in the zoo?

Each animal has a habitat that is its home.

Butterflies

Where do butterflies come from?

Did you know that butterflies come from cocoons? It is true!

When a caterpillar is ready it makes a cocoon and gets inside. When it is all wrapped up in its little house of silk, the caterpillar sleeps for several weeks.

During these weeks, it changes into a butterfly with wings and six legs.

When the butterfly is ready, it starts to come out of its cocoon and the wings grow and dry out.

Now it can fly! The butterflies lay eggs on leaves and from the eggs little caterpillars come out.

This is how the cycle of life begins again!

Level 6 -Cont'd.

The water

Water is made up of particles of hydrogen and oxygen.

Water can change into different forms.

When water is very cold, the water changes to become ice, which is a solid.

When the water is extremely hot and starts to boil, steam comes out. Steam is water in the form of a gas.

When you put water in a bucket, the water takes the shape of the bucket. Water is very heavy.

Something that is really light weight can float in the water. But if something is denser than the water, it can sink.

Water is important, we cannot live without water.

We need to learn a lot about water so that we can have clean water in the future.

Level 7 - Poetry and Realistic fiction

The clouds (A poem)

Look at the clouds rise

Up high in the skies

What do they look like to you?

I see cotton in bloom

I see a gnu, (Spanish version has duck)

Wearing a shoe.

No, I see a monkey (Spanish has Talking on a phone) climbing a tree.

The clouds sometimes look like fish in the sky.

*We could sit by the sea

And watch the clouds float and pass by.

*English rhyming version:

(We can sit by the ocean

And watch the clouds in slow motion.)

Sebastian the snake

Once upon a time, there was a serpent that came out of its shell with a 'Crackety-crack!' He slid out toward the light.

"Where am I?" he asked himself. "What is all this?" he said. What a curious serpent this was!

Sebastian wanted to go where he could cool off. He did not know where to go, but when he stuck out his tongue, he could feel the air better. Finally, he felt water, damp and refreshing. The water was spitting on his back.

"What is that?" thought Sebastian.

Sebastian was curious. He said to himself, "I hear some ssss, ssss, ssss, ssss, ssss, sounds. What is that?" Sebastian said to himself. "Oh! I see another snake like me twisting in the grass. What is that? Is it an animal? It looks like a snake relative. It sounds like a snake relative." Thought Sebastian. "But where is his head? His tongue? His eyes? Well, this cousin of mine has my color, and stripes like me!" he thought to himself.

Sebastian thought and thought. "I can smell water. I like water." he said. "This strange serpent has the taste of water." "Oh, a person is coming! I am leaving!" exclaimed Sebastian.

"Poor relative snake!" he said to himself. Sebastian was even more curious! "What type of creature is that? How come it looks like me? How come it sounds like me?"

It makes soundssss like SSSebassstian. But it only spits water." Sebastian was very confused.

"Now this is what I see: I do not think it's a viper, or snake, or serpent...do you know what it is?"

I am Ángel Emmanuel

Hello! My name is Ángel Emmanuel. I am seven years old. I was born in Santiago, Chile, but now I live in Houston, Texas with my mom, dad and my two sisters. It was a big change for my family.

We came from Chile last year. My dad had to move us because of his job. It was a big change for my family.

When I started school here, I was in the first grade.

At home, we speak Spanish most of the time, but we watch television in English. In school, I am learning to read in English and at home my mom is teaching me to read in Spanish. They tell me it is important to read in both languages.

This year I will be in the second grade. I love to read and am learning to help other children to learn to read also. Would you like to read with me?

My school is pretty, and I love to go to school. Now I speak English and have lots of friends. I am almost used to all these changes. I already feel happy here.
