

500 WORD PAPER

So that's this this is a really really fantastic fantastic example of how to evaluate both sides of the issue and the writer is also very very fair to to both sides which is what you want to do so even if the side that you don't agree with it okay when you're right about that side make sure that you respect that side and you say you know what there are both there were both you know strengths in weaknesses in both articles here right so there are strengths and this person's passage even though it's not best supported by the evidence okay so one thing and this person got a perfect score here so there's not much to criticize but I wouldn't say in either position could be correct right so in the last sentence they say although both parties may very well have the best interests of the districts in mind and either position could be correct it's clear that the letter provides a better supported argument you don't necessarily need to say either position could be correct I mean in this case it didn't hurt the person right so there's not much to say to pick a part of a perfect score there's a person got a perfect score but it's simply not necessary to say in either position could be correct cuz the whole point of this is to pick a position and argue why it's correct so you don't need to say that you want to acknowledge the strengths of both sides sure but don't worry too much about don't worry about saying either position could be correct because your whole point here is to make the argument that the position you've picked is the best so so that's just a minor thing but just to keep just keep that in mind here so also evidence from the text the use of evidence from the text was very strong here and there were no major grammar rules or punctuation errors here every sentence ended with a with a proper punctuation like a period or something like that or a question mark but the main thing is to stick to periods right so as you see throughout this I think most of the sentences here end in period so there's not much of a reason to use an exclamation mark or a question mark all right you can if you want to or if you think it fits but usually just stick to a period at the end of each sentence and then after that period just capitalize the first letter of the next word all right so if you just do that for the most part your punctuation will be good and grammar rules here we're also followed very well okay and so this was just a solid example of of how to do a 500 word paper here so now what I want you to do is think you know what's one thing what's the top thing top lesson that you've learned here in this example here in post down in the comments below that's gonna help you because it's gonna cement that in your head and you'll remember it longer but it's also going to help people who are watching this because they'll see that and I'll learn from that and hopefully you can benefit others as well and our GED test prep champions community here we've got going
